

Three Women, One Purpose

Through the eyes of women

Putting one step in front of the other is all that is required to make progress on a chosen path.

Which mountain is there to climb?

What mountain do we need to climb?

What does the mountain range look like in between?

Where is the action needed the most?

What needs to be done?

What strength does each woman require?

= by using our famous multitasking ability and less complicated thinking to come to the goal in sight.

All three women have come a long way, after their much loved flying careers came to an abrupt end due to ill-health creeping in on them over several years. Medical retirement they called it. What wasn't said was: Due to contaminated cabin air in their work environment. Contaminated by highly neurotoxic chemicals.

Over the years since, each woman on her own has researched and studied and piled up evidence and lists of help seekers. They have gathered information and knowledge concerning 'Aerotoxic Syndrome' the neurological injuries after having been poisoned, becoming women who may not be academics in the traditional sense or even decorated scholars, but experts in their own right by experimentation and observation in the old sense of the word 'scientist':

„A person who is studying or has expert knowledge of one or more of the natural or physical sciences.“

They have gathered insight in to the vast area that is called Aerotoxic Syndrome and with this intend to continue to help affected people, to educate the public and aviators about how and by what their health has been damaged and how to help themselves – through the eyes of a woman and a mother.

Each one has chosen her journey to fit in with what she feels strongly about, while accepting the valleys and peaks that make the going sometimes tedious.

Now the time has come to join forces and share their experience, wisdom and knowledge in a more compact and easy to understand way to help bring this disastrous situation to its final conclusion.
